WHEELING, FEBRUARY 27, 1893.

A Question of Supremacy.

A motorcade driven from his car and beaten in Benwood, a car stoned and damaged in Wheeling; this in brief is the Sunday record of the street car strike.

It may be that nobody will be punished for these outrages, but sooner or later the company will get protection for its property and its business, and there may be a bill of damages for taxpayers to shoulder.

The county of Allegheny in Pennsylvania and the county of Erie in New York are conspicuous examples of the costliness of this form of lawlessness. Those counties had to pay, and the pay came out of the pockets of their people. The workingman who owned his little home had to pay the same rate as the millionaire, and it was harder for him to pay it.

The company has a right to operate its road and its employees have a right to earn their living. Whoever interferes with the peaceful enjoyment of these rights invites the law to lay hold of him.

Of much more interest now than the settlement of the strike is the settlement of the question whether law or lawlessness is to be supreme in this community. No good citizen can hesitate long on which side to throw all the influence he has.

It is not a fight between the railroad company and some men whom it formerly employed. It is a contest between lawlessness and the public peace, between the mob and society.

The new administration cannot expect to have the undivided attention of the country until we see who is in fact the champion pugilist.

Extra Session of the Legislature.

In the forty-five days of the regular session the legislature should have been able to finish up all its business and go home. At the least it should have managed to get through with the appropriations necessary to the running of the state machinery.

The forty-five days passed and the legislature had not completed this important business. Now it is doing, or trying to do, the regular work in an extra session. What was the legislature doing in the forty-five days?

It has left no record that will defend it against the charge of wasting the time for which the people pay; and only neglect of duty for forty-five days will justify the cost of an extra session. It is decidedly not a good showing.

Mr. CLEVELAND selects for his private secretary Henry T. Thurber, of Detroit, partner of Don M. Dickinson, and Mr. Thurber is said to give up a law practice of $10,000 or $15,000 a year to accept the place. At this rate we shall have to begin to spell the private secretary with capital letters.

Wanted—A Lion.

Congressman Bynum, of Indiana, is gunning for a man who took to Mr. Crisp during the speakership contest the offer of Mr. Bynum's support, to be given on condition that the Indiana congressman was not to be "sacrificed" in the make-up of the committee.

Mr. Bynum, who was among the supporters of Mr. Mills, denounces this unknown person as "an unmitigated liar," and threatens to spend the remainder of his life smoking him out. Several persons remember that the proposition was brought to Mr. Crisp's headquarters, by whom not one of them can recall.

It is funny. Mr. Bynum thinks it tragic.

CHAIRMAN HARRITY declined to go into Mr. Cleveland's cabinet, but he accepts a receivership growing out of the Reading trouble. There is more money in a receivership, and the receiver does not have to be "at home" to callers.

Two Views of Endorsement.

Jacob Lorillard, of New York, is being sued to recover on a note for $32,000 which he endorsed. Mr. Lorillard sets up that he is under no moral obligation to pay, since he received no pecuniary benefit from the endorsement. Moreover, he is unable to pay. All he has in the world is an income of $40,000 a year left to him by his father, and all of this is necessary to the support of his family. This represents six per cent on nearly $700,000, a very comfortable fortune to get without effort.

Governor McKinley received no financial or other benefit from his endorsement of his friend Walker's notes, but he considers himself morally bound for every dollar thus represented. His wife regards her little inheritance as being bound also and has turned it over to a trustee. All they have in the world, including their home and its furniture, will not satisfy the debt, and Governor McKinley will make an effort to make up the deficit by his professional earnings.

Lorillard was born rich, McKinley was born honest. This may account for the difference in their views of the moral obligation of an endorsement.

Was it for this that Carl Schurz struggled so hard with his imagination in campaign time? But perhaps he may be located and made happy yet.

The Despised Office-Seeker.

"Why, pray, should the President-elect despise an office-seeker?" asks the Washington Post, which proceeds to say that there is nothing disgraceful in seeking office and that Mr. Cleveland has been at it through a long career.

Why, indeed? But don't you see that Mr. Cleveland is now for the second, and presumably the last, time at the head of the heap, and he is seeking to make a personal record that shall knock into smithereens all previous records?

Since Mr. Cleveland's election his manly bosom has been filled with an intense disgust of the whole caboodle of office-seekers. He has come to look on office-seeking as essentially vulgar, and he has resolved to lift himself grandly above all persons of whatsoever condition whose feet touch the earth.

Already he has buried tons of their plaintive appeals deep in the cavernous recesses of his Lakewood wastebasket and given the writers solemn warning that they are "not in it." Whom he wanteth he calleth and turneth away every one who is not on his visiting list.

"Let the office-seekers come on," proudly exclaims the Post. They will without further invitation. So long as they can raise the money they will go, and while they have credit they will remain. But it doesn't at all follow that they will get what they go for.

It would be cheaper to remain at home and wait until Mr. Cleveland finds them, but that would not swell the eager throng at the capital and keep in circulation the current coin of the realm.

IRISHMEN in Parliament accept the Gladstone home rule bill, but the Irish National League of America rejects it with scorn. Are these Irish-Americans more Irish than the Irish in Ireland?

A Lucky Irish Boy.

John W. Mackay, who was shot in San Francisco, is not only a lucky man and very rich, but he is also a man of ability. By birth an Irishman, he came to this country while a boy and went to work in a shipyard. Before he had reached his majority he was in California to try his luck.

Thirty years ago he began to strike it rich in gold mining. In connection with Flood, O'Brien and Fair he piled up money faster than he could count it. In the past ten years he has devoted his attention chiefly to ocean cables. Mackay is regarded as one of the clear-seeing, capable business men of the country. His fortune is estimated at $50,000,000.

GOVERNOR MCKINLEY is grateful for offers of assistance, but he declines all offers for aid. This will deprive many thousands of his countrymen of the anticipated pleasure of showing in a substantial way their appreciation of his services and character.

In the discriminating judgment of Rosewell G. Horr, if the Democrats can stand the disinfesting presence of Judge Gresham in the cabinet the rest of the country need not take on about it. Brother Horr is always saying things.

The Democratic senatorial idea is a protectorate for Hawaii—all the responsibilities and none of the advantages of annexation. Senator Morgan, who is in the habit of seeing further than some of the rest, is for annexation.

McKEESPOT has begun seventy-five prosecutions against house-soilers to determine whether pavement-cleaning ordinances can be enforced. Hello, McKeesport! Please send us down the result.

If Mr. Robert Louis Stevenson will kindly hold on to Samoa until we get through with Hawaii we shall be glad to confer with him about that little matter. One at a time.

The supreme court of Kansas sits down hard on the Populist house, but what do the Populists care for law and courts? They represent the People, always with a large P.

We are glad to see that Richard Watson Gilder is going to Washington to the President-elect. Under this starry guidance Mr. Cleveland cannot go wrong.

Mr. HARRITY lets the cat out of the bag. That silver letter was his, not Mr. Cleveland's. Secrets of this magnitude should be more carefully guarded.

From the looks of things David Bennett Hill did not deign to help with the job of making the new cabinet. There is no "snapp" in it.

The Hawaiian royal house of Cleg-horn might have its wounded feelings salved with silver. This would help to solve two problems.

The man who "enjoys Mr. Cleveland's confidence" should make haste to go into retreat and cool off. He is overworking himself.

HURRAH for William McKinley, of the United States of America! and hurrah for Mrs. William McKinley, of the same!

The only ex-Confederate in Mr. Cleveland's cabinet is a man who may be expected to give a good account of himself. Measured by all the standards no better man for secretary of the navy could have been found. Mr. Herbert's long experience on the committee on naval affairs, his intelligence and enthusiasm in behalf of the new navy, his standing in Congress, give him unusual equipment for the place.

At the sumptuous Washington lodgings in which he is to while away the time before he enters the white house, Mr. Cleveland will use knives, forks and spoons which formerly belonged to the Empress Eugenie, and he will take coffee from a cup used by Napoleon I. He should have some little thing of value that was Caesar's.

The Tory scheme to worry out and wear away the grand old man is not earning large dividends for the party of obstruction. Mr. Gladstone is getting away with the Tories in all the preliminary skirmishing. What a pity that he hasn't nine lives instead of one.

BREAKFAST BUDGET.

She—"Oh, give me a drama that has some poetry in it. In some of the older plays there is a wealth of imagery and a force of language that is entirely absent in the writings of our modern playwrights. What is more terrible, and at the same time more grand, than the curse in 'Richard III.'? He—"I don't think that I ever heard it. But you ought to have heard what I had to say about the street commissioner when I slipped on the icy sidewalk this morning!—Texas Siftings.

Many of the pretty and suggestive little words that serve as names for Japanese girls are as charming in English as in Japanese. It is not uncommon for a Jap girl to bear the name of a flower. On the other hand, however, many girls in Japan bear the names of some domestic utensil, as frying pan or dust-brush. Doubtless this results from the custom common among some peoples of naming a child for the first object that strikes the eye after the little one has come into the world.

A peasant plowing near the valley of Porcuna, in Spain, a fortnight ago, turned up an amphora filled with gold and silver coins, all in a good state of preservation. The gold coins are somewhat larger than a 25-cent piece, and on one side is the inscription: "G. R. A." The figure of a Roman soldier is on the other side.

There is a lake near the Japanese town of Nara in which no person is permitted to bathe, because once, many years ago, a Japanese emperor bathed there, and the waters have since been held sacred.

President Fillmore, who was a Buffalonian, took his law partner into his cabinet as postmaster general. Mr. Cleveland, another Buffalonian, will do likewise.

Rutland, Vermont, which will shortly become a city, has had, it is said, an organized corporate existence of 132 years; as an incorporated village, forty-five years.

The annual production of harness and saddlery in Cincinnati is estimated at $3,000,000, and that city claims to lead the country in this branch of manufacture.

A memorial statue to General Fitz John Porter, who for many years suffered an unjust sentence by court martial, is about to be erected at Portsmouth, N. H., where the general had many friends, both civic and military.

Chris Magee, the Pittsburgh politician, owns an estate from which he was often driven as a barefoot boy. In the rear he has built a fine residence, but has kept the front of the house and the lawn as they were many years ago.

Senator Peffer's whiskers cover a good deal of respect for his own family. His son holds a $4,200 position on the senate payroll, while his nephew has been cared for by a $300 position under the sergeant-at-arms.

Hugh O'Neill has the honor of having captured the first tarpon of the season on the Florida coast. After a fight lasting nearly two hours Mr. O'Neill landed the "silver king," which weighed 114 pounds.

Lord Chief Justice Coleridge, of England, was as bright and witty as ever on his seventy-first birthday anniversary, which occurred a few days ago.

Sculptor R. H. Park, who created the Montana silver model for the World's Fair, has been commissioned to execute a bust of President Harrison.

Gen. Joseph Wheeler is the youngest of the Confederate commanders of prominence who are still living, being now but fifty-seven years old.

Mr. Gladstone, it is said, was threatened with blindness in his early parliamentary career.

AMONG THE EXCHANGES.

An Obvious Fact.

Altogether it may be said that Mr. Cleveland has had his way in choosing his cabinet, and that he has indicated with unmistakable clearness his intention of running his administration to suit himself. He brooks no rivalry in party leadership.

The fact that the men who declined invitations to enter the cabinet far outnumber those who accepted shows that his independent course is anything but satisfactory to his party. Whether the Democratic congress will prove as subservient to him as the cabinet is likely to prove remains to be seen.

Why Not?

Philadelphia Press (Rep.) Now that Mr. Cleveland has completed his cabinet, he will turn to the composition of his inaugural address. Why not adopt the same plan that he followed with his cabinet, and give it to the country in installments—say one or two paragraphs a day? That method would permit free and timely comment and enable Mr. Cleveland to profit by any practical suggestions or criticisms before he should finish it.

A One-Sided Cabinet.

New York Advertiser (Rep.) Mr. Cleveland's cabinet consists of eight persons. Seven of them are lawyers. The only "business man" is Colonel Dan Lamont. Of the entire eight only one—Judge Gresham—took part in the suppression of the rebellion. Mr. Cleveland considerably refrained, as a Democrat, from helping to correct the mistake of the south, and he does not care to associate intimately with the gentlemen that did.

Children in Theatres.

New York Herald, (Con.) The stage presents temptations, but where will you find an employment that is free from them? There is no more reason why a girl or boy should not engage with a theatrical manager than with the proprietor of a grocery or a dry goods establishment. Hundreds earn a handsome living in this way. A great many are enabled thereby to keep their families together and the wolf from the door. In such cases and where there is no inevitable deterioration it is a species of cruelty to interfere with them.

New Developments.

Philadelphia Ledger, (Ind.) Atlanta has a menagerie consisting, if reports are accurate, of a careful of melancholy monkeys, an enervated elephant and a lion that is the redeeming feature, a lusty lion which it is believed in the back counties Hoke Smith, who presented the beast to the Zoolet, personally brought from Africa. That lion's roar has helped Hoke Smith's reputation.

Talked Too Much.

Chicago Tribune (Rep.) Hoke was taken and the Atlanta Constitution was left. Carlisle was called and Watterson did not hear even a small voice. Partner Bissell and Dan were chosen and Bourke Cockran was not even asked for advice. It is easy to see there was too much loud talk in Chicago last June.

Would Be Interesting.

Philadelphia Record (Dem.) We should like, if such a thing could be possible, to publish to the world the inward communings of some of the Kansas Grangers when they find themselves out on the prairies alone, or in the solitude of their corncribs, and their thoughts wander off to Topeka.

Memoir.

WHEREAS, Almighty God in his all-wise providence has deemed it proper to remove from our midst our esteemed friend and brother, G. A. Stuckey, Past Grand; and

WHEREAS, We sincerely deplore his sudden, and to us, untimely death, and further say his cheerful willingness to engage in all the work of the order will be a precious legacy to Wheeling Lodge No. 9. He was sincere in his purposes and friendship, absolutely void of hypocrisy. Candor was a cardinal characteristic, moral courage a bright adornment and truth a vital part of his nature. We feel that we cannot say too much in his praise, and his life is worthy of a prominent place in our memory, and we will ever hold him in the highest esteem. His example as an Odd Fellow, citizen, husband and father is worthy of our emulation; therefore be it

Resolved, That we tender Sister Stuckey and relatives of our deceased brother our deepest sympathy and commend her to the care of our Heavenly Father, who has promised to be a husband to the widow and a father to the fatherless.

Resolved further, That the chart and chair of the Past Grand be draped in mourning for the space of thirty days, that a copy of this memoir be sent to his wife and the same to be recorded upon the minutes of our order and published in the Sunday papers and the DAILY INTELLIGENCER.

Resolutions of Respect.

WHEREAS, In view of the loss sustained by the Linsly Institute in the death of Hon. A. J. Sweeney, a trustee; therefore be it

Resolved, That we deeply regret the death of one of our trustees, who was with probably one exception, the oldest in point of service on the board—always ready to promote the interests of the school, his loss is most deeply felt.

Resolved, That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to the family of the deceased in their bereavement.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the Linsly Literary Society, that they be printed in the daily papers of Wheeling and that a copy of them be sent to the family of the deceased.

It May Be Interesting to Know

That when excursion rates are made to Chicago for people who live in the East, to enable them to attend the World's Fair next year, it is contemplated by the Western roads to also make excursion rates from Chicago to all principal business and tourist points in the West, Northwest and Southwest, so that those who desire to spend a few weeks among their friends in the Great West may have an opportunity of doing so without incurring much additional expense. It may be well to consider this subject in advance of actual time of starting, and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Company has issued maps and time tables and other instructive reading matter, which it will be glad to furnish free of expense upon application by postal card addressed to:
